Fighting John" an Indian fighter

Severn's Run 1792

A band of fifteen Indians attacked the Severn's Valley settlement, killing two women and five children, livestock and burning several cabins before moving northward. Fifteen settlers led by Colonel Patrick Brown, set out in pursuit of the raiders. By nightfall they had tracked the Indians to the banks of the Rolling Fork River where the Indians crossed. The settlers camped by the river for the night without building a fire and with 2 guards posted. At daybreak they resumed pursuit of the raiding party. They found the Indians had gone ashore on the opposite bank. The settlers forded the river and quickly came upon the camp of Indians, which set between the banks of the Little Branch (Brown's Run) and the Rolling Fork. They were able to surprise the raiding party and a battle ensued, being a mixture of gunfire and hand to hand combat. At the end all of the Indians except the chief were killed in the battle, he fled making an escape. The Indian Chief had killed and scalped 2 of the three settlers that lost their lives that day. The white men killed in the battle were named Ashcraft, Vertrees, and Willingham. John Walters, uncle of Elizabeth Walters Castleman, was among the fifteen settlers at the battle, was wounded. Was an Indian fighter, who was mentioned in the last known Indian battle on Buron's Run. Had seven wounds from different Indian fights. John was married to Susannah Ashcraft.
